A Total Eclipse of the Sun

With the area of eclipse totality so close, we simply couldn’t resist the temptation to see this “once in a lifetime” happening (at least close enough to drive to). So, off we went to Rexburg, where we had rented space in a young farmer’s 50 acre viewing site. When we arrived, they were showing the movie, The Sandlot on a large screen they had set up. Earlier they had served complimentary scones as the new day dawned (no wait, that’s not right to the point of loaning us a queen size air mattress for our tent—wasn’t like camping at all! We visited, listened to guitar music, and waited with great anticipation as the moon finally began its march across the face of the sun. Here’s what we noticed that we hadn’t really anticipated—even before one could detect any darkening in the immediate surroundings, the temperature began to cool down more and more; as the darkness began to become apparent, the cows in the adjoining field began their march into the barn for milking or feeding (they never said which); at totality it was like sunset in all directions—some brightness on the horizon, but dark immediately around us; several planets were clearly visible in the sky, and then after totality, as the sun began to emerge from behind its mask, the roosters began to crow as the new day dawned (no wait, that’s not right—it was take two of the same day). Others noted the absolute calm at totality. The diamond ring was magnificent. Although we didn’t know to look for the solar flares around the edge of the moon at totality, the photos taken by a nearby photographer show them clearly. As quickly as darkness had descended upon us, daylight came again to light the world around us in Rexburg. Then we faced the traffic for the trip home. For all the lack of traffic we saw going to Rexburg, leaving was a completely different story—as in 3 hours to get the 30 miles from Rexburg to Idaho Falls. We opted to return to Glenns Ferry through Arco and Craters of the Moon—best move we made all day. Now we have one more story to tell, and one more thing to tell our kids about—the day that the lights went out in Georgia—no wait, that’s a song.

Former Governor Dies

Last week Idaho laid to rest it’s only four-term governor, Cecil Andrus. Governor Andrus died August 24th, a day before what would have been his 86th birthday. He was admired for his independence, integrity and dedication to family. Andrus was elected to the Idaho Senate from Clearwater County at age 29 and to his first term as governor at 39. A key to his success was his connection to blue-collar Idahoans. He never forgot where he came from. Andrus was asked by President Jimmy Carter to serve as Secretary of the Interior in 1977. After four years in Washington, Andrus returned home. In 1986 and 1990, he was elected to his third and fourth terms as governor. Andrus stood by his principles, even when it wasn’t easy. He fought for the power of states and engaged in tough battles with the federal government. He earned the respect of many Idahoans for decisive, candid leadership. His body was lain in state at the Idaho Capitol and he was buried Friday at Boise’s Pioneer Cemetery.
Dear Friends,

We are writing this letter to give our personal “thank you” to each and every one who prayed for us and gave us good thoughts, sent cards, made meals, stopped for a visit, did the yard work, made phone calls and all the other amazing and generous things you’ve done to help us get through this difficult time.

We feel very fortunate to know and have the relationships of each of you. Living in a community where people are so concerned and are so willing to give you a helping hand is a great gift.

So now, as Coach Uhl tells the baseball team, “Two strikes on ya, it’s time to battle!” With your continued helping hand is a great gift.

Winter is Coming - Time to plan ahead

Winter is fast approaching and it is time to prepare for an increase in our utilities as we use more electricity and gas to keep warm in the colder season. There are ways to lower these bills that are simple, easy and will amount to a significant reduction in that monthly cost. Did you know that appliances use power just by being plugged in? You can save money by turning off lights, fans, televisions and even computers and printers when they are not being used for long periods of time.

Turn down your hot water heater. Water temperature of 120 degrees is more than adequate for household use. Insulate your hot water heater to reduce heat loss.

Wash your clothing in cold water. The detergents today don’t need hot water to clean. Check you dryer’s lint trap. It takes more power to dry your clothes if the lint trap is full. Better yet, use the clothes line when you can. Sunshine and wind are free.

Clean under your refrigerator or freezer. These places are often dust collectors that make your appliances run more work and more harder.

Turn down your heat a few degrees in winter and wear a sweater to be comfortable. And reduce your air conditioner drain by setting the thermostat at 79 degrees in the hottest part of the summer. You will still be comfortable and save some money each month.

Draw your drapes in summer to keep out the sun during the day. Close them at night in winter to keep out the cold.

Turn down your heat if you will be gone several hours at a time. Just setting the thermostat 5 degrees lower than normal will make a difference. Turning down the heat at night when you are sleeping is another way to save.

Change your furnace filters in a timely manner. The furnace is more effective when it gets enough air.

Seal up your doors and windows to prevent heat loss. It can be as easy as new weather stripping around the inside of your door or putting plastic over your windows. And ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

Make sure your don’t have a leak somewhere in your water pipes. Even the drip of a faucet adds up over time. A toilet that runs all the time is rapidly running up your water bill. That is usually an easy fix and can save on your water and sewer bill. If possible, have your utilities set at level pay rather than to do without.

The most important way to pay your bills is to budget for them. Be aware of those utilities that you use each month. Plan ahead and put aside money to cover them. These little tips may not save much, but add them all together and they can reduce your utility bills significantly over time. If you do fall behind in your payments, contact the utility company. They may be willing to work with you on an arrangement to help you with your bill. By contacting them, you indicate you are willing to do something. Ignoring the bill until it is out of control never works.

The are resources out there to help you. The Idaho Care Line can put you in contact with local agencies that might be able to assist you in a number of ways. Call 2-1-1 or 1-800-925-3556 and they will put you in contact with the appropriate agency.

There is a food pantry available at the Senior Citizens Center on the second Monday, Tuesday and Thursday of each month from 9 to 11 AM. The Idaho Food Bank provides food at the VFW building on the fourth Tuesday of each month from 9 to 11 AM.

If you are in need of clothing, it is available at Twelve Baskets, 287 South Commercial, in the downtown Commercial in Glenns Ferry. On October 21st from 9 to 11, there is a free coat-give-away at the VFW building.

Depending upon the need, local non-profits are willing to help those in your neighborhood.

Community Referral Center is being set up. The goals are to work hard to find and move people to work in a number of ways. Currently a Community Food Pantry has formed our community to work as a whole to offer help in the most effective way possible. If you are interested in serving on that board, contact Twelve Baskets Cooperative Ministry, by Twelve Baskets Cooperative Ministry.

Part of his experience is to interview, when he can, people along the way to see how aware they are of this epidemic. He also interviews those who provide care for veterans, whether in the private or the public sector. However, he says, “the real honor and privilege is when I get to interview those who are either currently living on the streets or who have in the past and have since gotten off.” To bridge the delicacy of the subject, he typically goes through those who run homeless shelters, so there is an element of trust. These are tough conversations. Although Brennan asks pretty general questions, these are the people, to the homeless, as they talk about trauma, war, PTSD, and sometimes very terrifying experiences out on the streets. Living with the stigma of being chronically homeless is tough. Sometimes these people just want some conversation—no judgment, just sincere, honest conversation and to be treated like a human again. He’s heard about all kinds of experiences as the vets get help from the VA—all the way from very positive experiences to situations where they feel the treatment has made matters worse. The overarching problem is trauma and PTSD, where they feel isolation and alienation. Many have pulled back from society and have reached the point where they have just given up. They seem to feel it’s easier to just live under the bridge than it is to risk trying to reintegrate.

Brennan doesn’t carry a sign, and he has no idea what he is doing when people are willing to talk with him. He has met some wonderful people, many of whom assume he is homeless and have tried to极端 every kindness to him. He has found that the whole journey very enlightening.

His friends have encouraged him to do this trek before his life fills up with family, mortgages and the like. He treks an average of 12 miles a day, while carrying a 65 pound pack. He has given himself until the end of October to get to Fort Collins. We salute Brennan’s efforts to highlight the plight of homeless veterans.

Brennan is the author of, Communities: Light at the End of the World, which was published this spring. At the end of his journey, he will produce and make available to the public a series of videos about his experiences along the way, but mostly about the people.

Anyone interested in following Brennan’s journey can follow him on his Facebook page—Brennan Silver, author.

What Returning Your Shopping Cart Says About You

I have a pet peeve. You know when you’re at the grocery store and you see shopping carts littered around the parking lot? That drives me insane.

My wife knows how I feel about this. She recently shared a meme with me that said that you can’t be successful until you learn to put your shopping cart away. I chuckled at first, but then my mind started to think of how true that meme really was.

I realized there are 2 different people in this world: cart returners and cart deserters. Whichever side of the line you stand on says a lot about you.

Disclaimer: This blog post is a fun look at cart returning. There are obviously exceptions to every rule and not all cart deserters are failed people. Physical disabilities or family safety prevent you from returning a cart. Not all cart returners are perfect either. This blog probably doesn’t pertain to you.

Cart Returners Put Others First

There are hundreds of excuses for someone to leave their cart propped up in a grassy median or left between parking spaces. Maybe they’re in a hurry or it’s raining. Maybe they’re trying to escape the dirty looks they’re getting because their oversized truck is parked across 2 spaces. Whatever the reason is, there is one thing all of these excuses have in common: it’s all about them.

When you take the time to return your cart to its receptacle, you’re showing around money ensures none leaves, but also ensures no more can come in. An open hand allows money to come and leave freely.

Cart Returners Are Disciplined

We’ve all been tempted to turn to the dark side. Right? When it’s raining, is screaming and the nearest cart receptacle is 10 parking spaces away. Can’t leave the cart here just this once?

These are the moments that define us. Will you stand strong or break to temptation? Look on the bright side; that screaming child ensures that everyone will look and see you doing the right thing!

Walking the 10 spaces shows you’re disciplined. You’ve committed yourself to a moral standard that you won’t break. Discipline is an attractive quality in people. Employers look for it in their employees and people look for it in their potential mates. They want to know they can trust you no matter what the circumstances.

Cart Returners Are Happy People

I know I’ve addressed it already, but I’ll say it again. Cart returning shows you’re not selfish. Which is good because selfish people aren’t happy.

You know Ebenezer Scrooge from Charles Dickens’ story A Christmas Carol? Of course you do. Whether you’re picturing the traditional story or the Scrooge McDuck version, you know that Scrooge is walking the 10 spaces away. An open hand allows money and turns away anyone asking for help. While he is very wealthy, he is miserable and alone (and probably wouldn’t return his cart, either).

Giving to others brings happiness into our lives. Whether it’s a big or small gesture, they can make a lasting impact. By giving to others, you show that you care about those that are able to benefit from it. Cart returning shows you’re not selfish. Which is good because selfish people aren’t happy.

Cart Returners AreMerciful

Don’t return your shopping cart? I can’t help you with that. Need help with your finances? I’m your guy! Email me at @haddock@haddock.com to set up a free consultation.

Wall to Wall Traffic

So we got a little smug when our drive to Rexburg for the eclipse was so easy—a little bit of traffic immediately around Idaho Falls, but otherwise, traffic wasn’t bad. But then, when the eclipse was over, everything changed. This is the view we had for nearly three hours as we inched our way back to I-15 at Idaho Falls. At that point, prudence dictated that we double back a ways, and take US Hwy 20 through Arco and Craters of the Moon. Lots of traffic still, but at least it was moving. Was it worth it? Sure, for a once in a lifetime experience like this, it was worth it.

That you have been moozed? Yep, you have! And while it wasn’t a total mooning here, it was about 98.6 percent. It’s a shame that the Old Man in the Moon didn’t completely drop his drawers for us in Glenns Ferry.

Oh, I can hear some of you already. “What is the big deal?” What is so important about an eclipse?” Well, for one thing, it was a once in a life time event for me. And for another, I don’t have 99 years to wait for the next one.

Did you know that there are generally only two total eclipses a year? On rare occasions there can be as many as five. To have the eclipse over a populated area is only once every 300 years. Did you notice how your shadow was cast, and in the final phase, the eclipse became dropped considerably. When the sun once again returned, the wind began to blow as the temperature rose.

For ancient people this must have been a life changing event. Can you imagine seeing the sun go dark and having no explanation for it? It is easy to see how they created gods and some of the drama and spectacle of witnessing firsthand some of the drama and perfection of creation.

The moon is our nearest companion being just over a quarter of a million miles away. The sun is just under 93 million miles away (already the numbers are out of my league). I have a hard time believing this eclipse terpsichore was happenstance. The earth is special. We reside in the “Goldilocks zone.” We have exactly the right amount of light, heat, atmosphere, gravity, and magnetic protection to allow life. If one thing were to change only slightly, life, as we know it, would cease to exist. A profound thought. We are protected from the ultraviolet light of the sun by a layer of ozone that is literally one eighth of an inch thick. That infinitesimal layer in our atmosphere, the thickness of two pennies, is keeping us alive. The magnetic bubble that surrounds our earth reflects the sun’s radiation and turns destructive solar ultraviolet radiation from the Aurora Borealis and the Northern Lights.

The sun is just unmanageably large. The moon is far enough away so that we can safely say that we have moons. Did you notice how the mooned? Yep, you have! That you have been given the opportunity to compare the size of the moon to the size of the sun, which could not be more different. The moon is only 67 million miles away. The sun is just under 93 million miles away. That is 51.6 light years away. That is 5.6 trillion miles away. I have no idea how far that is. Once I have left 6 figures, I can safely say it is 51 with twenty one zeros following it. We now have telescopes and space craft that can see into DEEP space measuring out heat signatures, radiation, colors and speed to give us an approximate distance from earth. The universe appears to have no limits. And in all the study that has been done, they have found no other planet like this little blue ball that we call home.

Our solar system itself is choreographed to perfectly orbit around the sun. Each planet is far enough away from the others so as not to intersect or interfere with each other. All are on their own axis with the exception of little Pluto (which has lost its planet status). Most of the planets have moons that orbit around them, just as the earth does. Jupiter has 67 moons in varying shapes and sizes that orbit that planet. Can you imagine the view in that night sky? The eclipse was an astro- nomical event, one that many people will never see in their lifetime. It will be a day to remember. The moment of witnessing firsthand some of the drama and perfection of creation.

Tell Us Your Story

I think by now we have shown that we’ll print just about anything (although we do have standards). And who didn’t enjoy the humorous stories Steve Parke shared about his years growing up in this community? Well, it’s your turn. Just about everyone has stories like Steve’s. They just haven’t written them down and given them to the newspaper to print. So, we invite YOU to take the time to contribute to the content of the paper by writing down your stories and giving them to us to share with the world. You’ll end up being famous (as famous as you can be in a town this size), and we’ll get to know you better and be entertained along the way.
